

Acknowledgments

At the end of writing the thesis, I was filled with emotion. I am a tourism worker and deeply love this profession. I deeply feel the importance of outbound tourism to people's spiritual and economic needs. This paper was completed with great concentration and I experienced many setbacks and explorations. During this process, I deeply felt the help and support of many people, which enabled me to successfully complete this paper. I would like to express my deep gratitude and respect to them.

First of all, I would like to thank my instructor, Professor Dr. Lalita Puangmaha and Dr. Sittichai Farangthong for his selfless guidance and help throughout the writing process. Not only did he patiently help me with the topic selection, framework construction and research direction guidance, but he also gave me encouragement and support when I encountered difficulties, allowing me to find the right direction and complete this paper. She patiently listened to my suggestions and opinions, and provided me with necessary research resources and training opportunities, so that I could continuously improve my overall quality in the writing process.

Secondly, I would also like to thank my colleagues in the department who provided a lot of valuable information and data support for my research, fully ensuring the quality and reliability of my thesis. This support laid the foundation for me to successfully complete my thesis. Here, I would also like to thank my dear family and friends for their understanding and support, which allows me to write with peace of mind without being exhausted mentally and physically under external challenges and pressures. They often encouraged and supported me and helped me overcome many problems. Finally, I would like to thank Chinese tourists during the COVID-19 epidemic. It is precisely because of their efforts that we only then can we see broader prospects for outbound tourism.
